

Dear Sirs,

The XM-Sirius merger should be allowed to go forward. If I choose not to pay for their service, that's my decision. I have alternatives. Don't let NAB tell me about choices. I'm offended that they even are speaking on this issue and talking of less choice.

If this merger doesn't go through, probably one of these companies will fold and there will be no opportunity to impose some price guidelines and controls. At least now, the companies are willing to concede to a certain extent, but even if they didn't and prices rose, let me be the one to choose another form of entertainment, I don't need the FCC to help me.

Sincerely,

Jan Chizinski
